Hatchlings Games, 2023.

Our world was on the brink of collapse when the dragons arrived from a place parallel to our own.

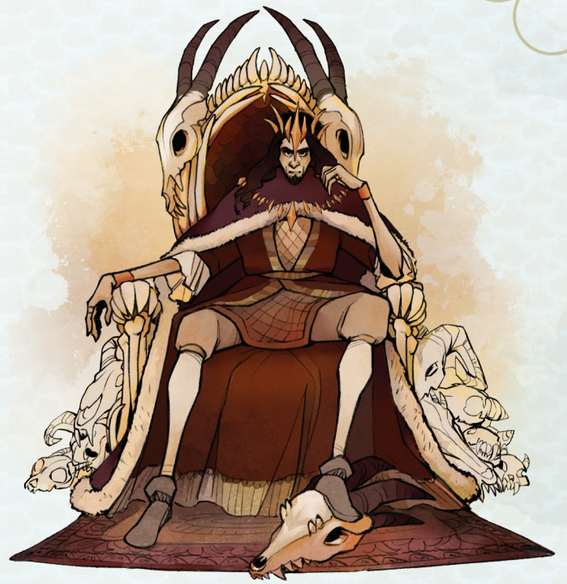
They came to help us, their unhatched eggs producing a wondrous energy able to power long-buried machines we once relied upon.

Eventually the land began to heal and the spore storms calmed.

But then we discovered the yolk of their eggs held the true power.

Using the revived machines as weapons, our tyrannical rulers slaughtered countless dragons to take their precious eggs, undoing centuries of peace in the blink of an eye.

Now a group of rebels called Dowsers work to save the remaining dragon eggs and restore peace to Praelar.



"Using your dowsing crystal, you must overcome the elements, uncover ancient mysteries, avoid the attentions of a tyrannical ruler and save the last of the dragon eggs."

Dying Earth

Climate change and conflicts had already brought humanity to its knees before colossal poisonous tornadoes we called spore storms threatened our extinction. As if hearing our death knell, dragons emerged from a parallel world to save Praelar and its people.

Dragon Mana

Harnessing energy from their unhatched eggs, the dragons powered machines long-buried beneath the spore fields. We used them to cultivate the land and clear poisons from the air and water. Even the spore storms began to disappear.

The Yolk Wars

Once we discovered the power of dragon yolk, our Mecharch leaders wanted it for themselves. They reprogrammed the machines as weapons and commanded them to slay dragons and retrieve their eggs. While some gifted the Mecharchs untold power, many eggs remained abandoned or broken.

Dowsers

There were those who rallied against this injustice. Those who believed that rescuing eggs and raising their hatchlings would heal Praelar and its communities once more. They were known as Dowsers.

Premise

Dragon Dowser is a solo journaling game using the Carta system by Peach Garden Games.

You play a mysterious character known as a 'Dowser'.

Your aim is to locate abandoned dragon eggs and return them to a Sanctuary

If you succeed before expending your resources, the hatchling you rescue can be reared to change the kingdom forever!

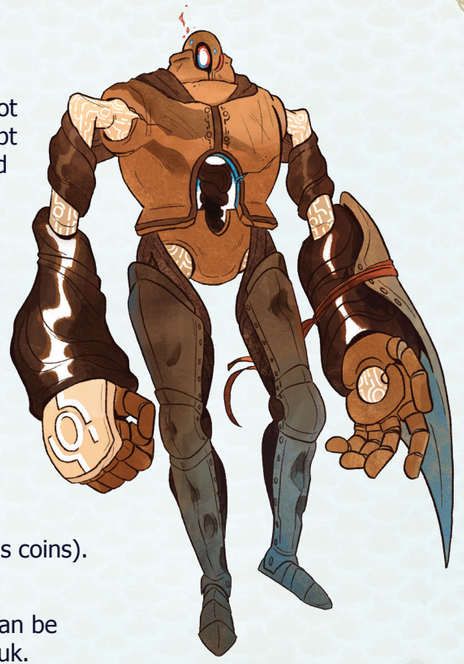
Tone and Safety

This game is suitable for all ages. Though there will be challenging moments, even perilous, your character cannot die on their journey. The themes of war will be largely kept in the background, but you will occasionally be confronted with the realities of on ongoing conflict.



Materials

A play-through should last around 30–60 minutes depending on which cards are overturned and the depth of your journaling.

You'll need:

- a deck of playing cards (standard 54 including jokers).
- A six-sided dice (d6) to represent your Dowser.
- A pool of tokens to represent your resources (such as coins).
- A journal or device to record your experiences.

The custom deck of cards seen throughout these pages can be purchased from our website at www.hatchlingsgames.co.uk.

Dowsings

Before the game begins, you must choose from one of four Dowsings. The narrative you select will dictate which dragon egg you must find. Each Dowsing responds to a card suit, an element, a season and a theme.

A
Ace of Hearts
If chosen egg, collect 6 resources and head for Sanctuary. If broken egg, bury fragments for 6 resources.
Ace of Clubs
If chosen egg, collect 6 resources and head for Sanctuary. If broken egg, bury fragments for 6 resources.
Ace of Diamonds
If chosen egg, collect 6 resources and head for Sanctuary. If broken egg, bury fragments for 6 resources.
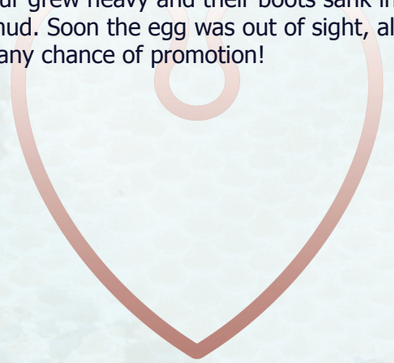
Ace of Spades
If chosen egg, collect 6 resources and head for Sanctuary. If broken egg, bury fragments for 6 resources.

Hearts (Hearts).
Water | Spring | Community

With its mother's last breath, the egg was dropped into the river where it traveled downstream, away from the hands of the Mecharch soldiers. They gave chase along the riverbank, but the water seemed to caress the egg and rage up to soak its pursuers. Their armour grew heavy and their boots sank into the mud. Soon the egg was out of sight, along with any chance of promotion!



Clubs (Talons).
Fire | Summer | Machines

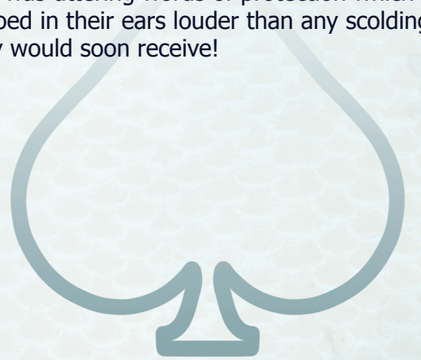
With its father's last breath, he triggered the volcano to erupt, releasing the egg with the lava spewing from the mountaintop and away from the Mecharch soldiers. They sent a machine into the molten river, but its metal limbs quickly melted and it collapsed inches from the drifting egg. The Captain watched as the machine went up in smoke — along with their ambitions!

Diamonds (Teeth).
Earth | Autumn | Mysteries

With its sister's last breath, she crawled to the back of the lair and set off the traps, collapsing the tunnel above the Mecharch soldiers. A few managed to escape being crushed, but the landslide would take months to clear. The Captain knew there must be another way to the egg, but where was the entrance? If they didn't find it soon, they'd be replaced by a soldier still wet behind the ears!

Spades (Scales).
Air | Winter | Survival

With its brother's last breath, he called upon an eagle to carry the egg far from the Mecharch soldiers. They were ordered to shoot the bird from the sky, but their bolts seemed to ricochet off its feathers as if they were made from stone. The Captain realised the dragon at their feet was uttering words of protection which echoed in their ears louder than any scolding they would soon receive!



Setup

- Take your 54 playing cards.
- Remove the Jokers and place them to one side.
- After reading the four Dowsings, select the Ace you wish to find from the four suits and place it to one side.
- Shuffle the remaining deck and deal 23 cards, adding the preselected Ace before reshuffling.
- Remove the remaining 28 cards from play.
- Place the 24 cards face-down in a 6x4 rectangular spread.
- Once finished, place the two Joker cards anywhere on the outside of the spread. These represent Sanctuaries and we recommend having ample space between them.
- Set aside 8 resources and place your d6 on one of the Sanctuaries. This will be your starting point.

Example Setup

Movement

- With each turn, move your Dowser (d6) to an adjacent card in any direction.
- Each move across the spread expends a resource. Cards can either give resources, expend them further or ask for a d6 roll. Your 1st move from a Sanctuary to the spread is free.
- Once you land on a face-down card, flip it over and follow the prompts to the corresponding entry in the rulebook.
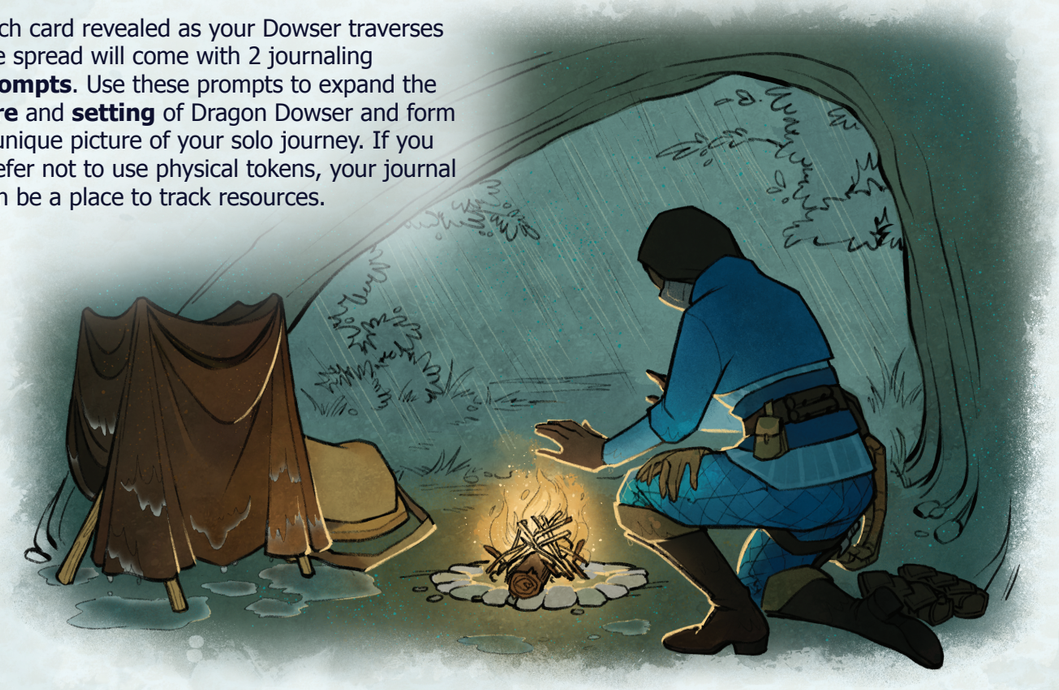
- If the card was already face-up, do not repeat the prompts. However, backtracking will waste resources so we recommend taking a linear route across the spread.
- If you discover an Ace other than the one you selected, gain 6 resources. These eggs are discovered cracked and you must offer a blessing whilst burying the fragments (see Blessings on pg13).
- If your resources run dry, you have abandoned your search for the egg.
- Once your Ace is revealed (+6 resources), retrace your steps back to a Sanctuary for success!

Example Movement

Journaling

Each card revealed as your Dowser traverses the spread will come with 2 journaling prompts. Use these prompts to expand the lore and setting of Dragon Dowser and form a unique picture of your solo journey. If you prefer not to use physical tokens, your journal can be a place to track resources.



Prompts

Every card in the spread (except the Aces) will have 2 prompts to inform your journaling. All cards will have a mechanical effect on your resources. Write answers to the prompts in your journal and make any changes to your resource pool.

We have tried to keep the prompts as open-ended as possible, while maintaining the lore of the world you explore. We have done this to promote creative writing and to ensure every player's experience is unique.

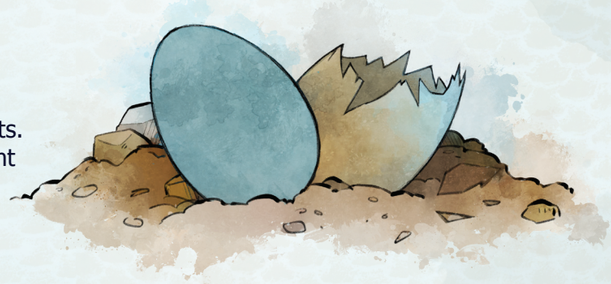
Resources

Resources can represent anything and will often be described through the card prompts. However, sometimes you may want to invent your own for the sake of the story.

Blessings

Only the Ace you chose at the start is guaranteed to appear in the spread. However, If you discover an alternate Ace, it is found broken with its contents destroyed. Though this is a sad discovery, your Dowser can offer a blessing for the departed dragon in whichever manner the player sees fit. This can take the form of a burial, a eulogy, some form of ritual or any other ceremony of your imagination. Please record this in your journal.



Saving the Egg

Once you've returned the egg to a Sanctuary, you have completed your task. But we want you to add one final journal entry. Imagine what it would be like to rear the hatchling to adulthood. The years of bonding. The training. Its eventual freedom. Its reaction to the war and Praelar's tyrannical rulers.

The Journaling Deck

All cards include flavour text, two prompts and a resource effect. If the prompt is chaotic (numbers 7 or 8), players will roll a d6 to determine loss or gain of resources.

Alternate Play

If your starting resources feel too limited, or you would rather play without challenge, consider beginning with 10 or even 12 resources.

Why not flesh out your journey between card turns? What happens from one scenario to the next? You could even turn your Dowsing into a multi-act attempt where failure is not the end, but a chance to restock at a Sanctuary before heading out once more.

On your travels you come across a lair belonging to a female winter dragon; she shelters you from a snow drift and sends you off with fresh supplies once it's melted.

Prompts
Describe her lair. How do you gain her trust?

Effect: +4

K of Spades
Positive

Card
Never thought I'd look down on the spore storms!

Description
You encounter a male winter dragon who you aided in the past and he remembers you. He carries you over a large mountain range which would normally be impassable.

Prompts
How did you help him in the past? Describe what it feels like to ride a dragon.

Effect: +5

Example Dowsing

Entry One

The weather looks surprisingly pleasant this morning. I hope this bodes well for the start of my journey. Not a spore-storm in sight and let's hope it stays that way!

I'm seeking the egg of an autumn dragon. I've heard rumours from my colleagues that the location is somewhere nearby. Well, nothing for it! Let's begin.

Entry Two

Ace of Spades - Blessing

The weather must indeed have been a good sign! As soon as I left my Sanctuary, I came upon a spot of disturbed ground just beneath some storm-ravaged trees. It only took me a few moments of digging to reveal the shattered shell of a winter dragon egg. As is customary, I said a few words for the loss and felt myself shudder, as if a chill wind suddenly blew - although the day is warm. I felt invigorated rather than scared. I know it was a blessing to guide my path. I spent a while burying the egg before gathering my supplies and pressing forward.

Entry Three

4 of Spades - "A pack of scavenging mutants raid your camp in the night."

I knew my luck had to run out sooner or later. After leaving the burial site, I travelled northward before making camp for the night. Perhaps I should have paid closer attention to tracks in the area, as I was awoken just before dawn by terrible shrieks and howls. Peering from my tent I saw four foul and twisted creatures - mutants. They may have been dogs before the poison of this land rotted and corrupted them. They ripped apart my supplies with an intensity clearly borne of desperation.

As hideous as they were, I couldn't help but feel sorrow. I emerged from my tent, shouting and making myself as large as possible. Sure enough they fled, offering no resistance, yelping as they dashed into the tree-line. My rations are significantly depleted - the next few days will be tough!

Entry Four

8 of Diamonds - "A tiny autumn hatchling seems insistent that you follow it."

The next couple of days have passed without incident. The weather continues to hold, with no signs of a storm on the horizon. If I'm honest, the calm was likely lulling me into complacency as I didn't notice the hatchling until I'd almost trodden on it! It bared its tiny fangs at me, more in annoyance than in any real anger. It seemed obvious, after a few minutes, that it wanted me to follow it for some reason. Having made good time so far, I decided that a detour couldn't hurt and so we travelled together, soon arriving at a heavily wooded thicket. The hatchling bounded ahead until I found myself standing in what looked like an ancient ruin. I glanced around, wondering why it had led me here, when a glimmer off to the left caught my attention. Rooting through some old crates I found a store of Mana! The hatchling bounced with joy as I thanked it earnestly and then disappeared into the undergrowth. Definitely a fortuitous encounter!

Entry Five

3 of Clubs - "You repair a farming machine but Mecharch soldiers reprogram it to slay a family of nearby dragons."

This is the sort of thing we have to deal with from these soldiers. Not two days ago, I repaired a machine for a local settlement to help with their planting. Today I saw the same machine, clearly tampered with, kill a nearby family of spring dragons in cold blood. Unfortunately, I was too far away to prevent the tragedy. I was, however, fuelled by an uncontrollable desire for vengeance and hunted the rogue machine down. Due to the fact that I was the one who'd repaired it to begin with, I knew its weaknesses. A few well-aimed blows and it fell.

Entry Six

8 of Clubs - "You retrieve some functional parts from an otherwise broken machine."

After the machine's betrayal, my mood had definitely sunk. My rations, although healthy, were dwindling. I was so wrapped in my thoughts I barely noticed the rusting hulk of a long-abandoned machine. Even from a distance, I recognised it as an assembly unit - used in factories to construct weapons. I approached carefully; it doesn't do to underestimate these contraptions. After making sure it was indeed completely useless, I checked it over and was able to liberate some rare parts. There is a market town about a day's travel away. I should be able to trade there for more rations.

Entry Seven

Ace of Diamonds - Success!

My trade at the town yielded few resources and I was fairly despondent setting off on the next stage of my Dowsing. My investigations led me through the sun-bleached countryside to a weatherworn cliff my colleagues had described. They said an egg could be buried near the northern side by a clump of rocks. It took some searching but eventually I found a likely spot. The sun beat down as I dug, and my hands began to cramp around the handle of my small spade. At last! The glimmer of a warm, round earthen-coloured egg! I willed my hands not to shake from excitement as I gently placed it in an incubator and made my way back to my Sanctuary.

Sanctuary

The egg hatched a few weeks later - a tiny, perfect hatchling emerged from the shell, its pointed-orange snout sniffing curiously. It was a female and I named her Sorcha. She was inquisitive right from the start and kept me on my toes as I tried to balance letting her explore with protecting my possessions from a fiery end. As she grew, she became strong and tempestuous, but we never lost our bond and made a formidable team as we worked to destabilise the ruling powers of Praelar. In the end, fifteen Dowsers went to war against the Mecharch and the dragons soared, turning the sky red with fire and black with smoke. There were many casualties, but after three exhausting weeks we were finally victorious. The rulers of Praelar were overthrown and peace was at last restored.

Extended Play

Please feel free to invent your own Dowsings beyond our initial four. We'd love to see our themes, lore and setting expanded in new directions.

Dragon Dowser

An RPG for all ages by Hatchlings Games

Using your dowsing crystal, you must overcome the elements, uncover ancient mysteries, battle long buried machines and save the last of the dragon eggs.
